Can't say any one is objectively "the worst", but in my experience Subway is the most inconsistent. Sometimes it's good, other times the quality is just not there.

My local Subway is also one of the very few restaurants in my small town, so I go there once every few weeks. It is under new management and they do not care about portion control. They load the subs up with meat and cheese for no extra cost. All of the veggies are fresh. I genuinely like my order but I get why others don't, it's hard to tell what you're going to get.

I'm really jealous of your Subway experience. My Subway is out of bread and meatballs by 7:30pm EVERYDAY. They close at 9pm. It's so depressing.

Subway has the worst franchise management. They will let almost anyone buy a franchise and they don't enforce any kind of standard on their owners.

You may go to one decent subway, but a half mile down the road you have a dirty restaurant selling stale food. I won't set foot in one

Subway sent out coupons for $5 sandwiches but none of the franchise owners in town accepted them.
